The Southern Arizona Transportation Museum's (SATM) Silver Spike Festival celebrates that pivotal moment in Tucson history, when Southern Pacific Railroad's first train arrived. Townspeople chose Esteban Ochoa to present a Silver Spike from Richard Gird's Toughnut Mine to the company president in appreciation for building the line to Tucson. A large crowd gathered around Mayor Bob Leatherwood and other officials to watch the ceremony. That spike is here today, enclosed in a case near Historic Locomotive No. 1673.

This year we will lead a re-enactment of the festivities at this location 136 years ago. Please join in playing the role of the crowd, who let loose their heartfelt joy with great vigor that day, then partied for a week! SATM will also honor inductees for its Railroad Hall of Fame.

The Museum keep history alive through free community festivals, including today's Silver Spike, its December Holiday Express, and August's Tucson Birthday Celebration. SATM also works to detail the story of transportation in Southern Arizona by collecting the accounts, art, artifacts, memorabilia, photographs, and documents central to the region. SATM shares the tale through bilingual exhibits, photographic and material archives, its annual lecture series, and group tours of the depot and locomotive.

Created in a joint City and Citizen's Intermodal Task Force's Master Plan, a Museum management committee began planning in 2001. Using a variety of grants, private donations, SATM opened March 20, 2005. A division of Old Pueblo Trolley, a non-profit, 501c3 corporation, SATM resides in the former Southern Pacific Records building at 414 N. Toole Avenue.
